Many legal experts no longer share an unbounded trust in the potential of law to govern society efficiently and responsibly. They often experience the 'limits of the law', as they are confronted with striking inadequacies in their legal toolbox, with inner inconsistencies of the law, with problems of enforcement and obedience, and with undesired side-effects, and so on.

The contributors to this book engage in the challenging task of making sense of this experience. Against the background of broader cultural transformations (such as globalisation, new technologies, individualism and cultural diversity), they revisit a wide range of areas of the law and map different types of limits in relation to some basic functions and characteristics of the law. Additionally, they offer a set of strategies to manage justifiably law's limits, such as dedramatising law's limits, conceptual refinement ('constructivism'), striking the right balance between different functions of the law, seeking for complementarity between law and other social practices.

Rules are no longer merely made by states, but increasingly by international organizations and other international bodies. At the same time these rules do impact the daily life of citizens and companies as it has become increasingly difficult to draw dividing lines between international, EU and domestic law. This book introduces the notion of 'multilevel regulation' as a way to study these normative processes and the interplay between different legal orders. It indicates that many rules in such areas as trade, financial cooperation, food safety, pharmaceuticals, security, terrorism, civil aviation, environmental protection or the internet find their origin in international cooperation. Apart from mapping multilevel regulation on the basis of a number of case studies, the book analyses its consequences in relation to forms of legal protection and legitimacy. In that respect it proposes an agenda for research to study how to cope with multilevel regulation.

This work offers valuable resources for researchers involved in studying the interplay between international, European and domestic law. For practitioners it offers background information on the ways in which many international rules come into being.

Die 38 kroatischen, slowenischen und tschechischen Verfassungsdokumente spiegeln das Entstehen der modernen Nationalbewegungen dieser mittel- und südeuropäischen slawischen Völker und deren politischen und kulturellen Emanzipationsbestrebungen gegenüber der Habsburger Monarchie um 1848 wider. Von besonderer Bedeutung für das tschechische Bürgertum sind dabei die beiden kaiserlichen "Kabinettschreiben für Böhmen", während für Kroatien die "Rechtsforderungen der Nationalbewegung des dreieinigigen Königreichs Dalmatien, Kroatien und Slawonien" und für Slowenien das "Programm des Vereinten Sloweniens" herausragen.
